Honor, Include, and Serve Multilingual Learners

The multilingual population is growing in the US, which includes newcomers escaping war or other systemic hardships that affect a child's well-being.

Given the challenges these students face, many well-intentioned school leaders often view such students as a deficit to be fixed. Together, we will look beyond academics to evaluate the factors in school culture and climate that foster inclusivity. We will develop and test action plans for each participating school to improve the most impactful components of multilingual learner experience. Ultimately, when students have a sense of belonging to their school and community, they are set up for success in academics and beyond.

Kathy has 20 years of experience leading district, charter, and private schools as an administrator. She is currently a doctoral candidate doing research on racism and inequity in schools with students of color. Kathy has worked as a consultant for organizational system changes at multiple nonprofits at a local and national level. Her consultant work includes changing organizational practices through assessments and self-evaluations where leaders learn deeper about themselves, their biases, and their school or organizational dynamics that oftentimes are not so evident on first thought.
